Joe Howe visited the park in and described the foot Truro Falls later named Joe Howe Falls eloquently in the following passage: "Lay thee down upon that rock, my gentle traveller, which the heat of the noon-day sun has warmed, despite the coolness of the neighboring waters - and there, with thy senses half lulled to forgetfulness by the murmurs of the falling stream - thy eyes half closed - and thy spirit all unconscious of earthly turmoils and care - give thyself up to musing, for never was there a more appropriate spot than the Truro Falls for our old men to see visions, and our young men to dream dreams. The instrument to carry it through is the cumulative vote.
